

A Brief Introduction to Distance Learning

Introduction to distance learning requires first of all, the self-concept. Although there are several definitions of distance education, it would be safe to say that distance learning is a mode of teaching where the teacher and student are separated in time and space. The concept of distance learning has been for centuries the history of mankind, but to use the latest technology in modern times has been added fuel to the fire, and to boost the distance training.

Distance learning and technology

Distance learning uses various means and methods for delivery of materials and education for students that could be distributed in different parts of the world. In an introduction to distance education, it would be correct to say that distance learning is to give the same traditional classroom experience for students sitting in their living room with non-class media. Today, distance learning using various media such as mail, high-tech tools like the Internet and audio and video conferences to help teachers meet with students and vice versa. Today, a variety of synchronous and asynchronous tools are available for people who are involved in distance learning.

What options are available?

Distance courses are ideal for those who do not have time or resources to pursue a full course in college, but are willing to further study. Distance Learning includes undergraduate degrees, professional degrees and Postgraduate Certificate courses for people eager to learn. Courses in liberal arts, humanities and social work, covering the range of distance learning courses in business management, technology, health, law, medicine and accounting as well. To put it in a word, distance education has something for everyone, if you want to learn.

Offering distance education?

Most colleges and universities worldwide provide courses accredited distance education for students wishing to learn more. The University of Phoenix Online has more than two bachelor's and master's degree. South University also offers online undergraduate and advanced. The Keller School of Business offers degrees in business from a teacher to students. Independence University - California College of Health Sciences offers certificates and diplomas to associate, bachelor's and master's level education to health to those so inclined.

This is a brief introduction to distance learning. The latest tools and technologies the world has indeed become a smaller place, and the effect of IT boom is reverberating in the field of distance learning. Today, it is possible a student sitting in a remote corner of Asia, will continue to a master's degree at Boston University, thanks to the Internet.